I'm sure there's probably some kind of copyright protection that I should have so... uh... I wrote it (it being what you're reading), just don't say that you wrote it and other than that I don't really care. Obviously don't make a book out of it without my permission, but if you want to print copies off your printer and sell them I would find that hilarious. Also, don't use printed copies to paper cut people to death. That would be wrong and I won't have my work used to murder innocent people. If you want to paper cut super villains to death that would be fine. Additionally, folding printed copies into squadrons of paper airplanes and bombarding high school classrooms with them would be quite awesome. I'll leave you with three rules, not just for how to treat this copy, but also for life.

1. Don't be dumb
2. Don't be a coward
3. Don't be a jerk

Stick to that and you should be good. Other than that, please enjoy this story, and if you have any kind of feedback you'd like to give me just send me an e-mail at

I must warn you however that letters delivered via scrolls attached to arrows are given highest priority and will be read first. Although, any archer who hits me instead of a nearby target will be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law.

Enjoy Reading,
